Honokono, October 14th, 1876.

Among other Parliamentary Papers th correspondence concerning the proposed annexation of New Guinea by Great Butain has just been published. Lord CARNARVON'S decreion on the question has long since been made known, but the publication of the correspondence throws some little fresh light upon the subject. A gentleman named LABILLIERE first opened the question by addressing to Lord CARNARVON a lotter strongly advocating the acquisition of the island on the ground of its proximity to the shores of Australia, its extent and productiveness, its possession of a magnificent land-locked harbour, and its position in relation to the Torres Straits. The noble lord the Secretary for the Colonies, decining the master worthy of consideration, forwarded copies of the letter to the governors of the various Australian Colonies, with the request that they would return such information, together with the feeling of the colonists on the matter, as might be within their power. Most of the governors were either opposed to the scheme of annexation or gave it a very qualified support. Mr. WELD. the Governor of Tasminia, along among them went in heartily for it. He stated that he was in fayour of annexation on the ground that a great maritime, colonising, and commorcial nation cannot well stand still, but must add to its territory; but he at the same time held that, if we assumed the rights, we should also assume the duties of sovereignty, and fairly earry them out. He was disposed to occupy New Guinea not only in name, but in sufficient force to maintain our supremacy, believing that it might some day tall into the hands of a strong nation, or become, if settled by British subjects, a refuge for six p.m. to five p.m. The morning service on onerged here with all wages due, and in addicriminals, by whom, if they were left unchecked, all kinds of lawlessness and outrages on the aborigines would be perpetrated.

New Guiner, as communicated to him by naval officer, eminently calculated to throw cold water on the hopes of would-be coloniste. But the Australian colonists were almost without exception warmly in favour annexation, and the Ministry of New South Wales, as will no doubt be remembered, urged the home Government to take immediate possession not only of Papus but of all the adjacent islands. But the Australians did not offer to contribute to the cost which this increase colonial territory would have involved, and this fact no doubt had its due weight with Lord Carnaryon in forming his decision. In the scheme, the Colonial Institute took is press the matter on his attention, while a society of enterprising gentlemen was formed with the object of establishing a settlement in the island their right to it would not be ever come into possession of the country either by cession or by annexing it. For must be given up. Further exploration may possibly show that it is better worth acquisition than it is now believed to be. It is, at all events, satisfactory to have Lord Carnaryon's assurance that no Power with which Great Britain is on friendly terms has manifested any intention of occupying the island. The subject is one that most intimately affects the inture of Australia. It is, in fact, a great Australian question, and the colonists are wrong in considering it a purely Imperial one. It they wish to keep the Torres Straits free from the possibility of interference, and New Guinez from becoming the colony of another Power, they must do their best to show the British Government that they no objection to bear a portion of the expense and trouble of making it a dependency of the British Crown. The argument of Sir Heacules Robinson that New Guines can never become a home for the Anglo-Saxon race i not so powerful as it at first sight appears. If the island is not well suited to the constitution of British colonists, it may not be so prejudicial to that of the Queenslander of Messus, Wilson, Nicholla & Co. | two-or-three-generalions hence. And there can be little doubt that the population of Australia will overflow to the neighbouring islands at some time in the future, if they are not previously occupied by other European CHEFOO and Messis. Hall & Holtz and Kelly Inations. France has already made several acquisitions, and she is sending out a party of explorers to New Guinea. Should their report be favourable, the French Government may then show an intention establishing a colony in the island. Under the circumstances, we can only adhere to an opinion previously expressed, that it would have been prudent and advisable for the British Government to have formally taken possession of Eastern New Guinea hoisting the British flag there. The Dutch claim a portion of the Western side by amount to the crime of manelaughter. premature as yet to 'attempt to found settlements there. It will be plenty of time WATSON AND CO. to think about that when North Australia is better settled, and New Guinea itself has been more fully explored. But as a measure formal annexation of the eastern half of the

THE ALLEGED CRUELTY AT SEA. REDUCTION OF BAIL. Thomas Penbody, John H. Snow, and Charles Stafford, the captain and first and secon officers respectively of the C. O. Whitmore were again , brought before Mr. May yesterday morning, when an application was made for a reduction of their bail. Mr. Brereton appeared for the prisoners: Mr. Ebarp was present on behalf of the Crown; and Mr. Deunys represents the U.S. Consul, who was on the bench. Mr. May said the prisoners and been remanded till that morning, but the only question that was now before him, was wbother there could be any arrangement made with regard to the reduction of the amount of bail fixed by him on the previous occasion. Mr. Brereton and $5,000 for the captain was very large amount, and he was quite sure that the object of Captain Posbody was to have his Great Britain, though the Press condemned conduct thoroughly investigated. He had bis character as a merchant captain to vindicate, and if he abaconded it would be tantamount up, and a deputation of its members had admitting the charge that had been brought an interview with Lord Carnaryon to against him. Instead of that he denies, in the strongest possible manner, the allegations which have been brought against bim, and is only unxious to court inquiry. It was not likely that a young man like him, under 30 years of age would compromise his character by escaping in New Guinea, for which they sought to ob. from an inquiry that, on the face of it, could no tain Government sanction .- Lord CARNARYON, amount to the serious crime of marder, but however, plainly told them that they had could only be one of manelaughter at the worst. nothing to hope for from the Government, their degree of guilt must be much inferior to and warned them that if they acquired land that of the captain, and the second officer's position was such that he doubted if he could urnish any bait at all. But he had been instructed that there were no each fetters. Taking all things into consideration, he thought there was very good > reason why his Worship should reduce the amount of bail. Mr. May asked if there had been any arrangement made about the enquiry before the Consul Mr. Dennys said there had not.

Mr. Brereton said he had scarcely had sufficient time to go on with that. There had been a great many documents to prepare in connection with the case in the Supreme Court, and he had been very busy with it. As Mr. Bailey and Mr. Dennys were present, he thought that | the matter of the reduction of the bail should cash, and plaintiff not being able to pily the be considered now.

Mr. Deunys said be only wished to make observation, and it was that the charge ma against the prisoners was one of murder, and by American law that was onot a bailable offence. The Consul could not in any way consent nor would be oppose any

> Mr. Brereton said, with reference to Dennys's remark about murder not being a bail- l able offence in America, that was a point his Worship could not entertain at all. The Extradition Treaty of 1870 provides that it must be shown that the alleged crime is one that, if committed within the jurisdiction of a British court, would subject the prisoner to imprisonment, and render his arrest justifiable and necessary. The case must be now dealt with according to English law. He suggested to the magistrate that the cuptain might be able to get buil to the extent of $2,000.

Mr. Sharp said he did not wish to comme on Mr. Brereton's application, but would merely observe that the orime with which these men are obarged was the greatest crime we have, and he did not think the present buil was more than it ought to be under the circumstances. At the name time it was not for him to offer any opposition to a reduction. Mr. Brereton said there was one circumstance to which he wished to direct his Worship's attention. The particulars of the charge against bere prisopera had got into-the nowenguers. and there was no doubt that the public mind was very strongly excited about it. Now, he would put it to his Worship, whether these charges as trey appeared in the newspapers, which substantially embodied the depositions before the Consul would amount to the crime of murder even they were all true. He submitted that taking the charge in its worst aspect it could only virtue of some such act; they have no settle. could show his Worship one case where a schoolmaster gave a boy such a terribly feroious, cruel beating that he died next day, and l-it was held that the origin only amounted to manelaughter. There might have been gross inbumanity in the case before them, but there could be no malice prepense. The reason why these men had been charged with murder was simply because the crime of mapshaghter was one that they could not be extradited for. Had of precaution against foreign occupation, the they been merely accused of manslaughter the Government here could not have interfered He could quite understand the legal-adviser of the Government taking a strong view of the case, but no doubt if the men were handed over on the crime of murder their Government would only try them for manslaughter. He defied the charge against them to be made one of murder; it could only be one of manthe public stands choke up the thoroughfare slaughter. Mr. May said the magistrate had power idmit to bail in the case of murder, but in the exercise of that power great discretion must be need, and that depended upon precognition of the evidence in the matter. He had a general knowledge of the evidence in this case, and showed continuous ill-treatment. In the course of the inquiry, as the affidavit went on to state, some of the members of the crew in giving their evidence made statements before the Consul which induced ultimately a certain course of action on the part of the Consul, the result of which notion on his part had been that there men were now in the gaol of Victoria. The events of yesterday were so fresh in his Lordship's memory that he need not refer to them. Something transpired in a civil inquiry which sot the thing in motion, and the official of the United States, who ought to conduct that inquiry, took a step, whether advisedly or unadvisedly, the immediate result of which was to aton that inquiry. The result of this was that there was an en parts statement, an ex parts case—he could not call it in case, but an ex parts rumour and feeling against these mon, and he thought it

SUMMARY JURISDICTION. BEFORE MR. JUSTICE SNOWDEN.

LEW SING V. C. F. GROSSMAN, $492.71.-This was an action for damages for the wanton conversion of 500 muskets pledged with defendant, $62.23 had been paid into court. Mr. Brereton was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Dennys for defendant.

Mr. Brereton said the facts were shortly these. In June last the defendant purchased from a mercantile house here. Mesers. Meyer and Co 2,000 Remington rifles. The sale was for whole of the purchase money, be arranged with defendant for a loan of $500 on a deposit of 6 500 of the rifles. At the time the deposit was made plaintiff told defendant that he was at liberty to soil the r fies if he could get $2 for each, so that defendant acted in the double factor as regards the intended sale. Defendan accordingly detained the muskets and at the question of bail, but left it entirely with his end of the first month sent a debit note to the plaintiff for interest $5, at the rate of 12 per cent, per annum, storage $1.50, and insurance $1.25, making in all $7.75. That was paid and a receipt given. At the end of the second month, on the 1st September, a debit note for $7.29 was sent in, slightly less having been charged for storage. That also was paid. At the time of the pledge no specific time was stated for the loan. Inc money was advanced indefinitely, but it appeared by the course of dealing that every month there was to be settlement, and be did not dispute that under the circumstances defendant could at any time have demanded payment, and if payment was not made, he would have had the right, or proper notice being given, to have sold the goods by public auction. That would have been a fair course of dealing, but how did Mr. Grossmann Act? He waited one month, sent in a debi note, and got 12 per cent for his advance. He waited a second month and got the sume, and plaintiff was under the impression that at al

events the matter would go on for unother

month, or until he got notice to the contrary, defendant having ample security. But on the 19th September, defendant informed plaintiff he had sold the muskets to Sung Cheong Tai, but Sung Cheong Tai not having naid up the whole of the amount he had arranged to sell again at his risk and expense. This was the first-time plaintiff had beard of any sale: he was astonished, and strongly protested against his goods being sold by auction. Notwithstanding that they were sold for any thing they would fetch. Defendant had never relused to pay interest. Sing Cheong Tai paid 2200. Mr. Grosemann would get that, and whatever they were sold for at the second anotion. Since the action had been commenced defendant had paid into court $62.73 in full of the claim, giving no further particulars. The damages were estimated in this way. They sharged $1,000. the price agreed upon, for the muskets, they gave credit for the $500 lent and for interest, insurance, and storage for th month of September, leaving $492.71. muskets in question wore the condemned Rem ington rifles used in the American war and were made probably at a price of $20 eac

Whatever their value now might be there coulbe no doubt they were worth more than $2 each. He argued that the pledgee had a right to sell except by arrangement, and that therefore the sale was unjustifiable. The plaintiff gave evidence in support of Mr Brereton's statement. Mr. Guedes was called and spoke to selling and were sold on the 19th September. The sale was twice postponed at the request of Mr account was rendered to Mr. Grossmann for goods sold on account of Lew Shing seller, and Sung Cheong Tai buyer. He usually mentioned the names of the parties for whom goods were nold before the sale was made. This concluded plaintiff's case. Mr. Dennys addressed the Court for the de fence and denied the allegations of the plaintiff He said plaintiff went to defendant's office in June and told him be had 2.000 muskets arrive ing by the French mail, and bad a purchaser or part of that consignment, and asked him to nell the goods on a brokerage commission of five per cent. The next day he brought Sung Cheong Tai to his office, and it was arranged the price should be $2, delivery to be taken within two months. A contract was made out and signed. Defendant afterwards came and asked for a loan of $500, and this amount was lent for two months at one per cent. for each month. The time commenced to run on the 30th June. On the 7th July Sung Cheong Taisent for one case of the goods, took actual delivery of them, and paid the sum of $40. The remainder were sold, but not/d-livered. Sung Cheong Tai after this appeared to be rather-hard up for money, and was pressed to pay and take delivery. as the time was running on, and on the 12th Sepbut he supposed he had not been able to obtain ! tember he paid a small sum of $55.50 but never took delivery. He promised to pay the whol of the money on the 19th September, and take delivery, but when he was inquired for on the morning of that day he was missing. When the explosion occurred the pressure on the boiler was largely in excess, but he did not think it exceeded 100%, to the square inch. The highest pressure required to it the safety vaive when bolted to the steamsheat in the dockyard was 52lb. In Lisopinion 🚟 the exploded boiler was capable of working to 281b, to the square inch. allowing a handsome margin for casualties. This was a higher pressure than would be permitted by the Board of Trade, but about the same that would be allowed by Lloyd's roles. He did not think it was prudent to work the boiler at 30lb., although it might have been safe. No evidence of material importance was taken it the inquiry on the 28th August.

On the 29th, Mr. John Swanston, engineer said he went on board the Thunderer on July 14th to take notes of the performance of the machinery during the trial. He went into the engine-room at a quarter to one, and asked Mr. Maxwell, the contractors' foreman, if all the stop vulves were open, and he replied. "Yes." The witness said. "I mean the main stopvalves," and Mr. Maxwell replied, "Everything is open, ready to start when they are ready on deck." He observed the engine-room pressuregauge indicating 25 lbs. He called through the pipe to the after stoke-hole, asking what pressure was showing at the boiler. The answer was "32-lbs." He then called air. Maxwell's attention to the oneine-room gauge showing less pressure, and he said it was all right, and he had better enter it in the book. He then usked Mr. Cooper, engineer, to go down into the stoke-hole, and he returned saying all the boilers showed 32 lbs, with the exception of the starboard foremost boiler in the after stokehole, which exploded, and that indicated a pressure of 13lb. About three minutes past one a loud explosion occurred, followed by a rush of steam and ashes, scalding him and driving him from the platform. In re-examination, he said that had he gone to see if the stop valves had been open he should have been disregarding the duty for which he was sent on board. If one of the valves were free it would carry off the steam even if the other stuck. That was the object of double valves. He would not say the valve would set fast if not worked On one side was an inscription commemorating the letter was to save the contractors expense; for three months; but it was possible, as nonhand-liftable valves could not be raised. He thought there should be an inspection at least quarterly. Had be been in charge of the Thunderer during the three years she was out of contractor's bands, he should have examined the non-liftable valves every three months.
